While the conduct at issue in this case is most serious and profoundly detrimental to the health of the Defendant's community, the sentence the Court imposes today is sufficient, but not greater than necessary, to achieve the purposes set forth in 18 U.S.C § 3553(a).

The Government, in seeking a below-guidelines sentence, conceded at sentencing that a range of sentences—including the Probation Department’s recommended three years’ supervised release, including eight months of home confinement—would be reasonable under the Defendant’s unique circumstances. Chief among those circumstances are: (1) the at least five-year gap between the conduct at issue and sentencing, during which the Defendant’s life and family circumstances have transformed significantly; and (2) the Defendant’s traumatic brain injury which continues to burden the Defendant and his family.

The Government further acknowledged at sentencing the challenges the Bureau of Prisons faces in providing adequate medical treatment to people in the Defendant's position. The Court concludes that, under these extraordinary circumstances, a period of imprisonment would not "provide the defendant with . . . medical care . . . in the most effective manner"—a concern the Court is directed to consider under 18 U.S.C § 3553(a)(2)(D).

The Court thus concludes that the sentence imposed—including, inter alia, an extended period of home confinement, conditions of supervised release that require the Defendant to “provide the probation officer with access to any requested financial information,” and forfeiture— achieves the purposes set forth in 18 U.S.C § 3553(a). That is, the sentence imposed is sufficient but not greater than necessary to account for the seriousness of the offense, promote respect for the law, provide just punishment for this serious crime, afford adequate deterrence, protect the public, and most effectively provide for the Defendant’s medical needs.
